DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The site complex consists of the Inn itself, a two story eight room double frame structure of native cedar and several out buildings of cedar and oak, among them a log kitchen, log smoke house, a barn made up of two double log cabins, and a barn now altered into a theater. Also on the property are "Lauderdale House", a 19th century residence moved onto the site and used now for classrooms and dormitory for scholars, "Hazel's Lone Oak", an 1854 cottage brought in & restored for use as an exhibition area and curator's office, and MacGregor House, a two story late Greek revival house with excellent detail.

The Inn itself was probably built in several stages and includes the original one room and loft structure of about 1834 in the present structure which was brought to its present size in about 1850 by turning the loft into a second story and adding an identical section to the north with a wide open central hall separating the two halves of the building at each level. There is a large, steeply pitched roof, two chimneys, and a wide inset double gallery with wooden railing and carefully spaced posts. The building is of native cedar.

There are eight rooms in the Inn. German painted and stenciled motifs were added to the ceilings and walls in several rooms. The ceiling of one room is totally decorated with garlands of fruit and flowers. In the center is a bright green parrot and at the sides a sheath of wheat, a cluster of roses, a peach, and a fire, probably representing the four seasons surrounding the symbol of longevity, the parrot. These freehand paintings were probably the work of Rudolf Melchoir.

The log smokehouse was moved in to go on to the site of a log structure of the same dimensions. Half of the smokehouse has a puncheon floor, the other half is of clay. The log kitchen was moved in to replace the destroyed original kitchen. The "Four Square" barn is two double log houses under one roof and was on the property when acquired for restoration. It is now used to display a woodworking shop, farm tools, and blacksmith tools. Moved on to the property also are "Hazel's Lone Oak", a one story and loft dog trot house with inset front gallery and with a decorative railing on the stairs leading to the loft which has openings over the porch for ventilation; the "Theater Barn" altered to seat three hundred and with a stage area and two dressing rooms for theatrical productions; Lauderdale House, a nineteenth century residence converted into a dormitory with classrooms for conferences; an innkeeper's cottage; the MacGregor House, a two story late Greek revival house of 1859, with excellent detail and painted decoration related to that of the Inn itself.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Stagecoach Inn at Winedale in northeast Fayette County was purchased by Miss Ima Hogg, daughter of former Governor Jim Hogg, and given to the University of Texas. It is historically significant, though not in the more obvious sense. No major political or military events occurred in or around this building. It is not even claimed that the peripatetic Sam Houston ever slept here. Of its half dozen early owners, none was spectacularly famous and only two were widely known in the Texas of their day.

Still, this lovely restoration in the valley of Jack's Creek is a striking symbol of much that is important in the history of Texas. It is on a homestead established in the Mexican colonial period in the heart of an area which drew settlers even before Stephen Austin, made it a part of his first colony.

The Inn itself is believed to have been built by Will Townsend in 1834 as a stout one room frame structure with heavy cedar timbers and a loft above. The property was purchased by Samuel K. Lewis and in about 1850 this structure was more than doubled, the loft turned into a full second story and an identical section added to the north with a wide, open hallway between the two halves of the house, upstairs and down. A broad two-story gallery was added across the front.

Architecturally and historically, the Inn combines the Anglo-American and German elements which flowed together in Fayette County to contribute to the cultural ferment which eventually produced one aspect of Texas culture. Paintings in the Inn, for example, are thought to have been done by Rudolph Melchoir, one of a family of artistic German immigrants who settled Round Top in the 1860's. German decorative motifs abound throughout the Inn.

Winedale Properties include various outlying buildings: Hazel's Lone Oak Cottage, built in 1854; the Lauderdale House, an Innkeeper's cottage; two barns; a log kitchen, smoke house, and the MacGregor House of 1859. Today, the University of Texas uses the Winedale buildings for conferences and festivals. There is a day school and there are museum and restoration workshops. Scholars performing area research in academic fields related to ethnic studies frequently visit the Inn, and a museum which depicts early German settlement in Texas is open to the public. Recorded Texas Historic Landmark - 1967. (The Stagecoach Inn.)
