DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

St. Mary's Cathedral, a cruciform Gothic Revival structure, built in 1847-48, has twin towers on the main facade and a tall lantern over the transepts. The original section of the Cathedral contains the central nave, side aisles, clerestory triforium, transepts, and apse. The interior walls and ceiling are plastered and painted. Trusses and purlins add a decorative effect by dividing the ceiling into panels.

The exterior is constructed of brick walls, stucco-covered and scored to look like stone. The central entrance has an arched doorway with double doors and above it in the front facade is a Gothic arched stained glass window of equal proportions. Additional window openings are formed by lancet arches with stained glass memorials. Hood-moulds decoratively shield these windows, while the gabled roof accentuates the Gothic quality. Nave columns support a trussed roof structure. The columns are simple wood coupled columns which brace the truss structure, elaborated by wood purlins, braces and struts.

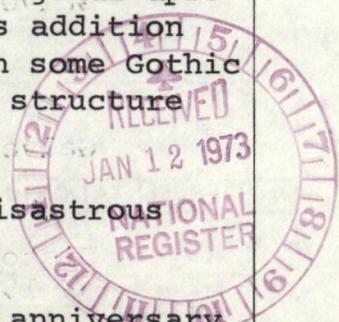

Nicholas J. Clayton, the first Galveston architect, constructed the lantern in 1876, following a devastating storm in 1875. Two years later a prominent Galvestonian donated a bell and a statue of "Mary, Star of the Sea," a symbol of protection from storms, crowned the tower. In order to bring the main towers into the proper proportions with the new central tower, Clayton then heightened the front spires in 1884. These tall twin spires are stepped back after a series of peaked gables, supported by beautiful brick corbel tables.

A later addition has been built behind the original apse with the tower and belfry as the connection. This addition serves as a school and is much later in style with some Gothic detail. On either side of this rear portion, the structure forms an inset gallery.

In 1900 Clayton supervised repairs after a disastrous hurricane.

Additional work was done in 1907 on the 60th anniversary of the Cathedral and the Diocese of Galveston. Marble wainscoting replaced the wooden material and a new main altar of

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

St. Mary's Cathedral is the oldest religious structure in Galveston and is one of the earliest buildings still standing in the city. The church is significant both for its architectural value and as an historic document of the evolution of the Catholic church in Texas. In addition, the cathedral has played a part in Galveston's heritage.

In 1838 Reverend John Timon, C. M., was sent to investigate the condition of the Catholic faith in Texas. He and twelve of his brother Vincentians revived the Catholic religion in Texas, culminating in the foundation of the Diocese of Galveston in 1847. Together with his vice-prefect, Reverend John Mary Odin, C. M., Timon managed to procure enough money in 1841 to build a wooden-framed church. However, a storm blew down the small church the next year. This tragedy convinced the priests that they needed a more durable structure. In 1844 during a yellow fever epidemic, a visiting priest, attending the sick and dying, fell victim to the disease and died within a few days. The following year the relatives of this priest sent 500,000 bricks from Antwerp, Belgium, to Father Odin as a memorial to be used in the construction of a larger, permanent church.

On May 4, 1847, Pope Pius IX created the Diocese of Galveston covering all of Texas, and appointed Father Odin as the first Bishop of Galveston. In March of that year Bishop Odin lay the cornerstone for St. Mary's Cathedral and on November 26, 1848, dedicated the completed church.

The priests and the Cathedral served a central role in the village of Galveston throughout the following years. During the yellow fever epidemic of 1853 and later in the Battle of Galveston during the Civil War, the priests ministered to the sick and dying. After a disastrous flood in 1875, a tower, topped with a statue of the Virgin Mary, was erected and has served as a symbol of protection against storms of the sea. During all of Galveston's hurricanes, and particularly during the great storm of 1900, many Galvestonians received consolation and strength from this figure of Mary.

The Cathedral remains the official church of the Diocese of Galveston.

Dear Jerry:

It has come to our attention that a restoration grant from the Moody Foundation is currently pending for St. Mary's Cathedral in Galveston. If this property could be placed on the Register in the very near future, I believe this would have a significant effect on this project's chances to receive the Moody grant.

With warmest regards.
