#3. Owner address (cont'd): Georgetown, 78626.

#10. Description (cont'd): carved springstones in lancet openings and buttresses; large, lancet, stained-glass windows on east and north elevations have wood tracery and roundel in upper portion; vestibules at northwest and northeast corners are topped by spires of pressed-tin while lower spire at northwest has octagonal bell-cast roof, multiple-level tower on northeast has additional story of pressed-tin octagonal roof. Two-story educational wing built onto west side of church in 1930; compatible design and similar stone-work of addition makes it a significant part of the church and its history.

City/Rural Georgetown		UTM Pt.
2. Name First Methodist Church	K. Starley	Acreage

#12. Significance (cont'd): noteworthy for its superb craftsmanship. Designed by Dr. Robert S. Hyer, a physics profesor at Southwestern. Stonework completed by the Waterston family who had come from British Isles and who worked on State Capitol in Austin. Church organized in 1874 soon after Texas (later Southwestern) University was established in Georgetown. In 1930, education wing was completed which closely resembles the craftsmanship and design of the original structure; it is an important element to the church's historical and architectural evolution.

#10. Description (cont'd): carved springstones in lancet openings and buttresses; large, lancet, stained-glass windows on east and north elevations have wood tracery and roundel in upper portion; vestibules at northwest and northeast corners are topped by spires of pressed-tin while lower spire at northwest has octagonal bell-cast roof, multiple-level tower on northeast has additional story of pressed-tin octagonal roof. Two-story educational wing built onto west side of church in 1930; compatible design and similar stone-work of addition makes it a significant part of the church and its history.

#12. Significance (cont'd): noteworthy for its superb craftsmanship. Designed by Dr. Robert S. Hyer, a physics profesor at Southwestern. Stonework completed by the Waterston family who had come from British Isles and who worked on State Capitol in Austin. Church organized in 1874 soon after Texas (later Southwestern) University was established in Georgetown. In 1930, education wing was completed which closely resembles the craftsmanship and design of the original structure; it is an important element to the church's historical and architectural evolution.
